Healthy Harry says: You Are The Best Protection Your Birds Have.

Keeping your poultry and birds healthy means doing everything you can to protect them from disease—such as washing your hands before and after you handle your birds, and keeping new birds separated from your other birds for at least 30 days.

Help keep your birds -- and those of your neighbors -- free of disease by:

- Learning how to protect your birds from germs.
- Looking for signs of illness.
- Quickly reporting sick or dying birds.

(Call your veterinarian, your local cooperative extension service, the State Veterinarian or State animal/poultry diagnostic laboratory, or the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) at 1-866-536-7593.)

This website has lots of good information on keeping your birds healthy so check it out.
